

My coworkers

Ben Klemens

22 March 2013

I work with lots of statisticians. Here are a few, all of whom I recommend following:

Jerzy Wiecek¹: Jerzy's blog is a pretty generalist statistics blog. He gets around the city, and often writes about meetups and other such events—he's how I found out about the recent data drives at the World Bank. He's also a twitter, whom you can follow @civilstat². [I'm @b_k³, btw.]

Chris Blakely⁴: he does time series, which is a somewhat foreign world to me. The methods are more oriented toward Fourier decompositions than fitting the parameters of bell curves. Chris has put a lot of work into writing new computing tools for the application of time series methods, which he applies to financial series. Even his diagrams are pretty awesome.

Josh Tokle⁵: he is more a mathematician and computer geek than a statistician. You can tell because he wrote the blog in a blogging platform you've never heard of, though his first few posts have been on statistical topics. His diagrams are a awesome in a diametrically different way from Chris's.

¹<http://civilstat.com/>

²<https://twitter.com/civilstat>

³https://twitter.com/b_k

⁴<http://imetricablog.com/>

⁵<http://www.tokle.us/>